Don't Missed.

Jealous competitors spread the report that our sale was not genuine, but people know better; so it helps to advertise us more, and virtually leaves us without competition. You cut this ad out and when you strike one of our competitors show it under his nose and let him produce goods at the prices advertised, and if he can't do it he'll come to us. If we don't produce everything as advertised, we will give you our head for a foot ball. Men's wool socks, 5c a pair; men's black, plain heavy overalls, $1.50; men's silk web suspenders, with wire buckles and all time improvements, 10c; men's smart, durable suits of clothes, $2.25; striped cotton socks, 2c a pair; men's heavy overalls, $1.50; wool mitts, leather faced, 15c; plain wool is only 9c. This store always had the reputation of carrying fine overalls, suits, and boys' wear, which have all to be closed out at once. The prices sell them on sight, and that's why our would-be competitors are so jealous. We don't blame them—either can you.

FRANK WILCOX CO.'S SHOW.

New Ideas in Window Dressing Being Imported to this City.

The wonderful "Brownie" windows of the past two Saturdays have drawn thousands of people to the Frank Wilcox Co.'s store, but it is safe to say that the "deaf and dumb" window of last night puts them in the front rank as promoters of novel window dressing. Two young men, deaf and dumb, occupied the window, one acting in the capacity of salesman, the other as customer, and the sign language was brought into use about all the time, for the customer seemed quite able to place his order in the variety of signs in the window during the course of the evening. The resting spells were interspersed with the display of such signs as "Do not compete," but not dumb in making prices. Prices that will speak louder than words Monday.

ONE YEAR OF RESCUE WORK.

What Has Been Done by the Merciful Saviour Mission.

The associates of the Mission of Our Merciful Saviour held their annual meeting last week, at which time the officers were re-elected, viz: Mrs. Worthington, president; Mrs. C. H. Gardner, vice president; Mrs. J. W. Van Nostrand, secretary; Mrs. Henry C. Yates, treasurer.

The reports were somewhat encouraging, as generous donations from one interested friend had cleared the debt which weighed so heavily last summer. Mother Caroline's report was exceedingly interesting, especially the accounts which have been given of help and comfort that have been given by the sisters.

The total number received into the home during the year was fifty-nine, and of these but one is known to have returned to her former life. Owing to the limited accommodations but a few can be cared for at a time, and it is necessary to have returned to her former life. Owing to the limited accommodations but a few can be cared for at a time, and it is necessary to have returned to her former life.

Probably the best work done by the mission is along preventive lines. A number of young girls just on the verge of ruin have been restrained and led into paths of peace—saved from joining the ranks of the fallen. Sister Sarah is an indefatigable laborer in this branch of the work, and in addition to regular work in Sunday school and at the mission, makes many visits with most beneficial results. Both she and Mother Caroline are unwearingly in their ready response to calls to any part of the city, where they can help or save those in trouble.

It is a pity that a work so needed and whose record is so excellent should be continually crippled for funds. It is not deplorable that the mission should be continually crippled for funds. It is not deplorable that the mission should be continually crippled for funds.

While the services of Mr. Melk are very valuable, it is claimed to be very possible that there will be a change when the new board gets together. One of the most active candidates for the position is L. H. Andrews, who is understood to have the support of some of the old members and of one or two of the new men. It is said that President Powell, who term expires with the current year, would like to continue his connection with the board as its legal adviser, and in this case he is sure of a generous backing. Several other local lawyers have interviewed members of the board with a view to entering the race, but it is expected that the plan will fall between the three gentlemen already named.

Prof. Marble's Engagements. Superintendent of Schools Marble is in flatter demand as a speaker at educational gatherings in various parts of the state. He has accepted an engagement to speak at Falls City on the evening of November 28, and at Plattsmouth, November 30. He is also on the program of the convention of the Nebraska State Teachers' association at Lincoln, December 26, 27 and 28, where he will discuss the subject, "What Is the Child?"

CIVITAS CLUB OF BROOKLYN

How Society Girls of a Big City Serve the Cause of Municipal Reform.

HIGH PURPOSES OF THE MOVEMENT

A Firmly Grounded Body of 175 Young Women Who Know How to Keep Their Own Council and Get Down to Business.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—(Special.)

Prompted by a spirit of ridicule or a desire to know that which is strenuously withheld, much interest has been manifested and many articles written upon the Civitas club of Brooklyn.

The girls who constitute this club were daughters of conservative parents and wished to avoid, rather than seek, notoriety, believing that the ends they have hoped to accomplish might be better secured by moving in a quiet manner, rather than by proclaiming their purpose abroad with a flourish of trumpets. So they calmly went on in their well bred way, refusing to talk of their aims and declining all invitations to have their photographs appear in the papers.

The result of this policy has been that the Civitas club stands today firmly grounded, a body of 175 young women strong, whose example has been emulated or the desire to do so evinced by the women of other cities. Letters from many quarters asking for information are constantly received from those desirous of organizing in a like manner.

And it is in response to these letters—that the purpose of the club is being made known to the public. The methods adopted—that this article is now written.

THE CLUB'S BEGINNING. Last fall a great political wave swept over Brooklyn. A political party was called by the Women's Health Protective association, at which 500 representative women were present.

A strong desire was expressed to see their city purified and their own influence was voted on the side of good government. Some of the daughters of the women were present and it was the casual remark of one of these girls that led to the forming of the Civitas club. Interested in the matter, she afterward replied in answer to a question put to her, "I should say that I was. I wanted to get up and make a speech myself." This remark was overheard by a woman who had long believed that the society of women in the city was in need of purification, and that the power of development; that backed by her position, influence, cultivation, wealth and beauty, that power should be limitless, and she determined to give her a chance.

She sent out printed invitations to a number of girls in Brooklyn inviting them to a "parlor" in her home for the purpose of discussing the subject of "How Girls in Society Can Exert an Influence for the Moral Uplifting of Their City." Speeches were made by several of the older women, and the subject was appealed to to use their power, politically and morally, for the good of the city.

PURPOSES OF THE MOVEMENT. The idea was not for women to go into politics, but to inform themselves intelligently on matters that so nearly affected them.

It was an appeal for them to live for something beside pleasure—an earnest effort to better the city in which they were growing along lines entirely new. The girl who said that she would like to make a speech, offered her a chance.

She thanked the women for the interest shown and said that she, for one, was ready to respond. Her courage inspired others and a club was organized, the hostess appointing the young lady who had spoken as president and others as vice president, treasurer and secretary, and the club was born.

The name Civitas was adopted, and the ultimate object of the club was to be the good of the city. It was agreed that the first year would be purely educational and that once a month the club should have a prominent man address them on some form of municipal life; that meetings should be held every alternate two weeks, at which papers should be read, written by the girls themselves, either upon municipal topics or questions of the day. The invitations sent out were as follows:

You are cordially invited to become a member of the Civitas club. The object of the club will be to awaken an interest in matters pertaining to our municipal welfare, and to foster all movements within the circle of its influence which have for their end the improvement of any phase of city life.

The subjects selected for study were: Education in our city, art advantages of our city, the newspapers of Brooklyn, the amusements of Brooklyn, the government and courts of Brooklyn, the philanthropic societies and hospitals of Brooklyn, etc.

DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY. It was not an easy matter to organize successfully. Like all novel movements, the club had to combat opposition, taking a form that is hardest to bear, ridicule, and the movement would have been abandoned for the earnestness of the senior director, the woman who had originated the idea. Not only were the jests of brothers and the satire of club members to be borne, but in many cases the girls themselves had to be talked over.

The officers said that they would be satisfied if they started with fifty members, but to their astonishment at the first meeting showed 129 names. Of the owners of these names, the Sun, in a witty article, said that 100 of them were pretty, and added that the prettier the girl, the less she knew about politics. Exception was taken to the fact that she went to the meeting in her own carriage and wore fine frocks, but she ought not to have been blamed for that. She didn't possess anything else! It was thought best to limit the membership to 175, as a body of that number would have greater influence and greater effect.

Ten members, appointed each time by two directors, receive and usher at the meetings, appearing without hats, and acting as hostesses. This club has a most congenial atmosphere, and is the means of bringing together different members hitherto not acquainted.

Among the distinguished men who addressed the club were Hon. St. Clair McKelway, editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, Mr. Norman L. Slike, a popular young club man just elected supervisor, who explained fully the method of voting, and Hon. Stewart L. Woodford, who also spoke on municipal affairs. During Lent, Rev. W. J. Rainford, D.D., came and talked upon "Practical Philanthropy in Large Cities," and the last public meeting was addressed by Hon. Frederick W. Hinrichs, who endeavored to explain the intricacies of the tariff.

In practical work, the club from its funds has supported a Red Cross nurse during the summer months in the tenement house district, and is undertaking and will conduct especially for a year, a work of educating capable children at the Kings county hospital in Brooklyn.

While many of the members thus far have been passive ones, others, who are active, have been working hard. The work was new, had been studied and written and it is hoped in another year, by means of appointing committees, to convert the whole into an active, working body. The girls have responded so well has surprised even the most cynical.

It was long since learned that combined forces produced greater results. The college girls have organized in deference to her alma mater. The working girls from motives of self-defense and development. It remained for the society girls, to whom everything had been given, and of whom nothing was expected.
